AIA/CES Registered Provider Program Summary Handout

Provider: Stanley Systems Integration, a Division of Stanley Security Solutions

Length: 1 Hour

Program #: 00SI01

Credits: 1 Hour

Program: Access Control Coordination for Architects

HSW: Yes

Description: Identify architectural coordination issues to integrate security into the design process. Understand that early planning for access control, intrusion and surveillance is critical. Review elements and components of basic security planning. Explore access control, components and integration into construction.

A/V Needed: Electrical power and a screen for the presentation. The CES facilitator will provide the necessary laptop computer and will coordinate with the on-site professional development administrator to make provisions for projection equipment.

Learning Objectives: By the end of the program the attendee should have a basic understanding of: coordination issues associated with integrating security into the design process; planning strategies for access control, intrusion, and surveillance systems; access control systems and components and their integration into the construction process.

Target Audience: Architects, Engineers, specifiers, owners, and other design professionals serving the commercial and industrial market. The recommended audience size is between 5 and 50 professionals. The program is suitable for professionals of varying experience level and includes a question and answer period at the end of the program.

How Taught: The CES facilitator utilizes a PowerPoint presentation to deliver a comprehensive course covering relevant architecture coordination issues associated with the implementation of access control, intrusion, and surveillance systems.

Facilitator Qualifications: All Stanley Systems Integration Regional Managers have been trained on CES guidelines and presentation skills. Regional Sales Managers have over ten years industry experience in security, access control, intrusion and surveillance.

Costs: This program is offered at no cost.
